Among the Farmers

"FEED THE FLOW."

Bridal Tree.
I have watched you, my husband making:
Your pumpkins hide:
The corn and peas:
Your folded petals swell:
Your golden seedlings:
And only spring and sun:
Can know your bridal day:
And in the dawn:
Your golden seedlings:
Of leafy garden, white:
And pink and red:
O, tremulous and bold:
Your blossoms hold:
A hundred whisp'ring lovers:
That hover on your flowers,
And all the world is yours:
Your fragrant bridal hours:
So soon your feast:
Blood-red time is fled:
And all your lovers, sped:
Your golden seedlings:
Your green leaves open:
The golden seedlings:
The miracle of fruit again!

Government Slaughters Herds.

Three hundred and fifty herds and flocks consisting of 23,000 cattle, 13,000 sheep, 10,000 swine and 300 goats have been slaughtered in California by state and federal authorities in their efforts to stamp out the serious epidemic of foot and mouth disease raging in the Sun Kist state. Some 50,000 animals have been slaughtered and buried in trenches in California. A very small number of animals have been saved at least five feet of earth. At present only 18 herds and one exposed herd have been saved.

On April 18, the authorities had reduced known infection to three counties of the section formerly quarantined. The situation, however, remains serious in Merced and Los Angeles Counties. An emergency appropriation of $1,500,000 was voted by congress a few days ago to be applied to this work. Congress has previously appropriated $1,000,000.

On Costa Costa County there was a recurrence of infection on two farms, the several weeks after the disease had been directed efforts to stamp out the disease. The infected premises follows the slaughter of the herd. The disease is extremely infectious and as a result very stringent quarantine regulations have to be applied as the disease may be carried in any of the following ways:

Under instructions of the biological survey, western authorities have begun the disease in the infected areas—and all such as feed on dead bodies of cattle. The disease may be carried on any of the following ways:

Among feed, drinking water, straw, pastures, and hides, and, of course, by cats, dogs, etc.

As a result the state of Arizona quarantine has been a great deal of trouble before they crossed Arizona's line. It behooves every one to lend their best efforts to assist in stamping out the disease. New England must be on the alert.

On the other side of the Atlantic, Great Britain has been badly hit since last August, and in spite of the best efforts to keep the disease out of the country, we may have an outbreak on this side of the continent. We have had experience with the disease in the past, and we may have an outbreak on this side of the continent. We have had experience with the disease in the past, and we may have an outbreak on this side of the continent.

"O Lord, who didst not despise the companionship of the ox and the ass, have pity on our cattle, and preserve them from the plague that has fallen upon them. Comfort the farmers and fill their hearts with hope and courage. We pray for the health and safety of all our livestock, and for the success of all our efforts to stamp out the disease. Amen."

The disease is an acute, highly contagious fever attacking cloven hoof animals. It is caused by a virus and in its early stages the disease is not very noticeable. Symptoms of the disease appear from two to ten days after exposure. First symptom is a fever followed by a loss of appetite, saliva flows from mouth in frothy threads. The inner surface of the mouth becomes inflamed and the animal refuses to eat. The disease is highly contagious and may be spread by contact with infected animals or by contact with their secretions.

It is necessary that the liver of a goose reach its maximum size before being used for food, and in the autumn the farmer must select the largest birds, place them in individual boxes, and feed them on paste of corn, cooked and salted, and give them a small amount of alfalfa. If the birds are not fed in this way, they will be overfed and their livers will be enlarged and they will be unfit for food.

Cows on Yearly Test.

The management of cows on yearly test is not unlike the care given any dairy extra fresh to carry her over the period of parturition and the time shortly after. It is desirable to dry the cow six weeks to two months before freshening to give time for preparation. A longer period is impractical even with the help of making a larger record of milk.

It is impossible to recommend any one best ration for fitting, as economy should be kept in mind. A combination of bran, ground oats, hominy or corn meal, and oil process oil makes a satisfactory fitting ration. Where a good quantity of hay and silage or roots are fed, the oil meal should be about ten per cent of the ration. The amount fed should be determined by the size and condition of the cow; usually from eight to 16 pounds a day is sufficient. When the cow is dry it is well to give her a legume hay and the milk will be produced during the coming lactation.

The under the above development a light lactative grain ration should be fed, such as four parts of bran to one part of meal. Usually a cow will not want more than one hundred acres of this meal. The usual precautions should be taken immediately after freshening. The cow should be kept in a clean, dry, well-ventilated stall. The milk should be produced during the coming lactation.

The amount of grain given the fresh cow will vary according to the condition of the cow and the quality of the feed. The grain should be given gradually, until in about two weeks, the daily ration will be about one hundred pounds. The grain should be increased as the production increases; about one hundred pounds of grain should be given a good cow to follow. This proportion may be gradually increased for about three weeks, then the production should be reduced to the minimum possible without decreasing the milk production. From then on feed what is necessary to maintain production as constant as possible—about one pound of grain to every three pounds of milk. A cow carrying a full milk should be given a full milk ration. The grain mixture may be a carefully balanced home mixed feed or a reliable ready mixed ration. A cow carrying a full milk should be given a full milk ration. The grain mixture may be a carefully balanced home mixed feed or a reliable ready mixed ration.

Three final rules are: 1. Be regular about the feeding routine. 2. Feed liberally but with discretion. 3. Study your cow.

Variations in Milk and Cream Tests.

(By Prof. L. M. Dorey.)

Tests of milk and cream vary from time to time, and for a variety of reasons. These reasons often are not obvious and milk producers consequently are at a loss to explain the variations. The following are the most common causes of variation in milk and cream tests:

1. Stage of lactation. 2. Fat content. 3. Temperature. 4. Time of day. 5. Season. 6. Diet. 7. Health. 8. Management. 9. Storage. 10. Transportation.

1. Stage of lactation. The amount of milk and cream produced varies with the stage of lactation. The milk is richest in cream during the first few days after parturition, and then gradually decreases. The cream content also varies with the stage of lactation.

2. Fat content. The fat content of milk and cream varies with the stage of lactation. The milk is richest in fat during the first few days after parturition, and then gradually decreases. The cream content also varies with the stage of lactation.

3. Temperature. The temperature of milk and cream varies with the stage of lactation. The milk is richest in cream during the first few days after parturition, and then gradually decreases. The cream content also varies with the stage of lactation.

4. Time of day. The time of day when milk and cream are produced varies with the stage of lactation. The milk is richest in cream during the first few days after parturition, and then gradually decreases. The cream content also varies with the stage of lactation.

5. Season. The season when milk and cream are produced varies with the stage of lactation. The milk is richest in cream during the first few days after parturition, and then gradually decreases. The cream content also varies with the stage of lactation.

6. Diet. The diet of the cow varies with the stage of lactation. The milk is richest in cream during the first few days after parturition, and then gradually decreases. The cream content also varies with the stage of lactation.

7. Health. The health of the cow varies with the stage of lactation. The milk is richest in cream during the first few days after parturition, and then gradually decreases. The cream content also varies with the stage of lactation.

8. Management. The management of the cow varies with the stage of lactation. The milk is richest in cream during the first few days after parturition, and then gradually decreases. The cream content also varies with the stage of lactation.

9. Storage. The storage of milk and cream varies with the stage of lactation. The milk is richest in cream during the first few days after parturition, and then gradually decreases. The cream content also varies with the stage of lactation.

10. Transportation. The transportation of milk and cream varies with the stage of lactation. The milk is richest in cream during the first few days after parturition, and then gradually decreases. The cream content also varies with the stage of lactation.
